Hi Folks ,

Scroll down to view this month's second Featured Photograph and learn about significant discounts when ordering Fine Art Prints.

I'll soon be leaving on a Photography trip to the Northwest. As many of you know, this is a favorite area of mine and I can't wait to return. I may be hard to reach because I won't have phone service or access to email on a regular basis, but I'll return any messages just as soon as possible.

Please feel free to share any of my Newsletters via Facebook or directly from your email. I really appreciate you doing this.

Welcoming Spring

In my March 1st Newsletter, I discussed how I was ready for spring, particularly after February's weather not soon to be forgotten. Well, it slowly arrived and is now in full swing.

During spring new growth is prodding and pushing its way forward, and on some days, I think you can actually see the flora grow. Everything is new and fresh. The greens seem to be more vivid, almost neon or iridescent. They are the "Spring Green" that only comes once a year and doesn't last long.

I spent some time this Spring at Potato Creek State Park (link to Website). At this time of year, and particularly during the week, the park is not crowded. In early morning, no one is there. The more time I spend in the park, the more I've come to appreciate its abundance of scenery and wildlife.

Featured Photograph No. 1 above was taken at dawn when the temperature was 29 degrees. Along with a pretty sunrise, the cold temperature and warmer water created rising steam from Worster Lake. Lakes are fascinating to photograph because they can change colors so rapidly depending upon the sky, clouds, bottom content, lighting and time of day, etc.

Featured Photograph No. 2 is of Potato Creek in the park near sunset, once again accenting the vivid Spring Greens.

Spring is also a wonderful time to observe and photograph wildlife as so many migrating birds return and most wildlife begin to pair. In my June 1st Newsletter I'll feature some of the wildlife at Potato Creek State Park.
