Hi Folks,

You may have noticed that I use software from GoDaddy to prepare and send my Monthly Newsletter. I recently upgraded to their new and improved product and I took this opportunity to make some changes in my Newsletter's format. Although still similar, starting this month my Newsletter has a slightly different look and feel. I hope you like the updated format.

THE MONTH OF SPRING

It was the middle of February when I started writing this Month's Newsletter. Although we haven't had a terribly cold and snowy winter, we did recently have near zero temperatures and some significant snow. Maybe it's because I'm spending a great deal of time preparing for my 1st spring photography trip. Or, perhaps it's because the daylight is noticeably longer, but it's around mid February, regardless of the weather, that I start thinking of spring.

"Nature's Perfection" Toughed Leaved Iris near Cape Falcon, Oregon

I know that between now and the 1st day of spring (and even after) we can have some pretty nasty weather. However, little signs of spring will start to appear, like the birds pairing, crocuses starting to push through where it still looks dead or even through some lingering snow, and we will start to get an occasional warm day.

So in case you weren't in the mood for spring already, this month I Feature 2 Photographs of wildflowers. Just as sure as we will have snow again in the next couple months here in Northern Indiana, the wildflowers, as well as our garden flowers, will come. Of course, some springs and summers are better than others for flowers; however, they will be here and wherever you are.

As you might guess, capturing the image in Featured Photography No. 1, took a great deal of patience, and a lot of luck.

I thought the Tough-Leaved Iris in Featured Photograph No. 2 was about as perfect as nature could make it. It was found high above the cliffs at Cape Falcon in Oregon. It had somehow survived all the elements and was the only one of its kind among other wildflowers in a very large area. I couldn't pass up the chance to capture the moment and perfect wildflower.

Enjoy everyday of your upcoming spring!
