CANADA GEESE

Last September I entered this month's Featured Photograph in the Nature's Best Backyard Photography Contest. Contest rules include areas near where you live and this image was shot in Potato Creek State Park, located just south of my home.

This March I was notified that it was selected as one of the winners and will appear in their Spring/Summer 2016 publication to be released in June. Their publication can be purchased from their website by clicking on Nature's Best Photography. The publication will also be offered for sale at the Smithsonian National Museum of Natural History.

For those of you not familiar with Nature's Best Photography, the following is an excerpt from their website:

"Nature's Best Photography print magazine is a large-format, award-winning, showcase of nature as recorded by the world's leading professional photographers, naturalists, adventurers, as well as new, emerging photographers. You will find images and the stories behind the shots on topics such as: wildlife, landscapes, plant life, travel, how-to photo tips, inspirational essays, and winners from our international photography competitions!"
