Last month's Newsletter discussed my spring 2021 trip to the Redwood National and State Parks (RNSP) and featured photographs from the forests. Click here on Newsletter No. 125 to see last month's Newsletter.

As previously mentioned, I also spent considerable time exploring California's coastline, in and around, RNSP. There were many beautiful spots along the California coast that I was able to access. I was pleased to capture a few good images and wanted to share with you a couple, as my Featured Photographs this month. See below in this Newsletter how to obtain a 20% discount off the list price of a Fine Art Print or Canvas Wrap, of either of the Featured Photographs.

If you visit all parts of the RNSP, including the Humboldt Redwoods State Park, which is technically not part of the RNSP, you'll cover about 130 miles of coastline of California's total 840 miles. Much of this coastline is rugged and not easily accessible. However, there are many magnificent places one can enjoy along the way.

Featured Photograph No. 1 near Klamath, California, where the Klamath River flows into the ocean, is actually within the RNSP boundaries. The Klamath River is California's second largest river by volume.

Featured Photograph No. 2 was shot at Clam Beach County Park and Little River State Park in Humboldt County, just south of Prairie Creek Redwoods

State Park. Although I normally prefer sunrises and sunsets, the significant storm clouds coming in off the ocean made for a spectacular backdrop for the Yellow Bush Lupine that lined the beaches.

My visit to RNSP area was wonderful and productive, but once again, I think to myself, “I barely scratched the surface, so much to see, and so little time”.
