"MORE PACIFIC OCEAN BEACHES FROM OREGON"

If you’ve followed my travels and photography, you know that I’m drawn to the sea. The ocean is a world of its own teaming with wildlife. You never know what you’re going to see and find on the beach. Each tide and wave is different making for a continuum of changing seascapes. At High Tide, you may find yourself quickly retreating to keep from being swept away, and during Low Tide you may find yourself exploring what was the ocean, floor with rocks and tide pools that reveal their secrets.

Featured Photograph No. 2

Sunset on Wizard's Hat, Bandon Beach, Oregon

I've spent a fair amount of time photographing the Oregon Coast in the past and in September I spent time exploring and photographing Oregon's coastline again. I had planned to start this trip in the very most southern part of Oregon near Brookings, but was precluded by the significant smoke from the summer's forest fires. Attempting to go to at least one new area where I'd spent little time before, I proceeded to go to Cape Arago. I wasn't disappointed. In this relatively small area near Coos Bay, there are 3 unique Oregon State Parks (Sunset Bay State Park, Shores Acres State Park and Cape Arago State Park), Seven Devils State Recreation Site, Whisky Run Beach and the quaint fishing village of Charleston.

One particular point of interest was viewing all the hundreds of sea lions and seals at Simpson Reef and Shell Island, part of the Oregon Islands National Wildlife Refuge. Best viewed from a lookout from Cape Arago State Park, this is the largest "haul-out" for marine mammals on the Oregon Coast.

I also spent time again at Bandon Beach, Cape Perpetua Scenic Area, Yachats State Recreation Area, Tolovana Beach, Cannon Beach and Indian Beach at Ecola State Park.

It was a great trip and I'm already looking forward to more ocean beach adventures.
