GOING BACK TO BIG SUR

This past Fall, I went “Back To Big Sur”, and hence, the title of this month’s Newsletter. This was my 3rd trip to this magnificent area. I know I’m dating myself now, but I couldn’t help but be reminded of a song by Johnny Rivers, released on his 1968 Album, “Realization”, by the same name, “Going Back To Big Sur”. If you haven’t heard this great tune, please click on the following YouTube link to listen and view a video:

Going Back To Big Sur, by Johnny Rivers

My 1st Newsletter on January 1, 2012 featured Pfeiffer Beach, one of Big Sur’s many marvelous beaches, approximately 27 miles south of Carmel, California. If

Pfeiffer Beach – Newsletter No. 1

The Spanish name for the mountainous terrain south of Monterey was "el pais grande del sur", which meant "the big country to the south". Thus, it took on the name Big Sur.

What is Big Sur? First, it's not a national park or state park (although it does contain parts of 3 National Forests and 2 State Parks). It's more of a region, with no exact boundaries, but is generally thought of as the area comprising the rugged Santa Lucia Mountains along approximately 85 miles of the California Pacific Ocean coast, between Carmel and San Simion. California's coastal Highway 1 follows this rugged coastline and is considered the longest and most scenic stretch of undeveloped coastline in the contiguous United States, and one of the most beautiful coastlines in the World. There are stunning views all along this entire stretch of Highway.

Although Big Sur is undeveloped for the most part, it's made up of both private and government owned land, and has between 1800-2000 full-time residents. It's one of our national treasures and requires exceptional procedures to protect it from development. The region is protected by the Big Sur Local Coastal Plan approved in 1986, which is widely regarded as one of the most restrictive developmental plans anywhere.

Although I don't know when, I plan to return to this remarkably beautiful area. And once again, I'll be reminded of Johnny Rivers wonderful tune, "Going Back To Big Sur".
